Forgiveness

Can you imagine being betrayed by those closest to you—even your own family? Picture the pain, the heartbreak, and the lingering question: "Why me?" There are different examples that one could point to throughout history of betrayal; Brutus and Ceasar, Judas and Jesus, and the list can go on. However, this emotional turmoil and lingering question also mirrors what Joseph endured when his brothers sold him into slavery. Yet, despite years of suffering, imprisonment, and slavery Joseph's response when he finally confronted his brothers was not fueled by bitterness but by grace. Joseph was not seeking to get even, instead he sought after peace. He was ready to forgive his brothers' evil actions and even saw the good that was able to come as result through the Lord's help.

As Christians, we are called to embody this same attitude (Ephesians 4:32). There are going to be those who inevitably do us wrong, however, remember that God first forgave us. We should be those who are seeking forgiveness, and striving for God to be at work throughout our lives. This allows us to demonstrate His love and forgiveness in us, by us loving and forgiving others.
