Who Is My Neighbor?

One of the better known parables Jesus told is the Parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:30-37). Before Jesus told the story, a lawyer asked Him, "Who is my neighbor?" Rather than offering a simple definition, Jesus answered with a powerful story.

We may know the parable but let us for a moment look at the actions of each individual toward the injured man. A priest came but passed on the other side. Later, a Levite did the same. Finally, a Samaritan came along, and he treated the wounded man's injuries, carried him to an inn, and paid for his care.

What lesson should we learn from this parable? After telling the story, Jesus said, "Go and do likewise" (Luke 10:37). Serving God involves more than worship alone. The priest may have participated in religious activities, but he failed to show mercy when faced with a person in need. The Levite belonged to a tribe devoted to God's service, yet he also passed by without helping.

The Samaritan demonstrated what true love looks like. He allowed his plans to be interrupted so he could care for another person. In the same way, Christians must be willing to be inconvenienced for the good of others. This Samaritan, the most unlikely candidate in the Jews mind, showed true love which is expressed through action (1 John 3:18), and a love for others which reflects our love for God (1 John 4:7). We should not just be those who are known as God's people but should also demonstrate our love through our actions.
